

DIFFERENT APPROACHES TO THE PRONOUN IN LINGUISTICS

Abdullayev Ikramjon Xashimjanovich
Andijan State Institute of Foreign Languages
English teacher
Email: ikramjona@inbox.ru
Qaxarova Go‘zaloy Alisher qizi
Andijan State Institute of Foreign Languages
Student, Group I-21-11

Annotasiya: maqolada olmosh so‘z turkumi, uni tavsiflashdagi murakkablik hamda uning o‘ziga xos xususiyatlari talqin qilinadi.

Tayanch iboralar: so‘z turkumlari, olmosh, kategoriya, grammatik ma‘no va vazifa, mustaqil so‘z turkumi, aloqa, bog‘liqlik.

Аннотация: В статье описывается часть речи - местоимение, сложность её описания и специфические особенности.

Ключевые слова: часть речи, местоимение, категория, грамматическая функция, грамматическое значение, номенклатура, первичный, отношение, связь

Annotation: this article describes the pronoun as a part of speech, the complexity of its definition and its specific features.

Keywords: part of speech, pronoun, category, grammatical function, grammatical meaning, nomenclature, primary, relation, connection.

The problem of parts of speech is one that causes great controversies both in general linguistic theory and in the analysis of separate languages. We shall have to examine here briefly a few general questions concerning the pronoun as a parts of speech which are of some importance for Modern English.

The meaning of the pronoun as a separate part of speech is somewhat difficult to define. In fact, some pronouns share essential peculiarities of nouns (e.g. he), while others have much in common with adjectives (e. g. which). This made some scholars think that pronouns were not a separate part of speech at all and should be distributed between nouns and adjectives. However, this view proved untenable and entailed insurmountable difficulties. Hence it has proved necessary to find a definition of the specific meaning of pronouns, distinguishing them from both nouns and adjectives. Form. As far as form goes pronouns fall into different types. Some of them have the category of number (singular and plural), e. g. this, while others have no such category, e. g. somebody. Again, some pronouns have the category of case (he — him, somebody — somebody's), while others have none (something). Function. (a) Some pronouns combine with verbs (he speaks, find him), while others can also combine with a following noun (this room). (b) In the sentence, some pronouns may be the subject (he, what) or the object, while others are the attribute (my). Pronouns can be predicatives. [2.65] As we have already seen above, the definition of pronouns as a separate part of speech has caused many difficulties. More than once in the history of linguistics the very existence of pronouns as a part of speech has been denied. However, attempts of this kind have not proved successful and in present-day grammars, both English and Uzbek, pronouns are recognised as a part of speech. This in itself seems to prove that they indeed have some peculiar features which cannot be "explained away".

Distinction of types of pronouns. There are many examples in English pronouns of the same phonetic unit used to express different meanings in different contexts. So the question arises whether this is a case of polysemy, that is, different meanings of the same word, or of homonymy, that is, different words sounding alike. We may state the following cases in point: that demonstrative and that relative; who interrogative and who relative; which interrogative and which relative; myself (and the other self-pronouns) reflexive, and the same pronouns intensive (non-reflexive).

Etymologically the word 'pronoun' means "a word used instead of a noun". This meaning reflects, to some extent, the role of pronouns in language. Owing to the exceptional variability of reference a pronoun may replace hundreds of nouns with comparatively stable or limited references. This explains the fact that pronouns are used very frequently and form a considerable part of any text, though as a class of words they are not numerous. But the role of pronouns is much greater than it can be inferred from the meaning of the word pronoun. It is not always that a pronoun is substituted for a noun. Pronouns can be substituted not only for nouns, but for other parts of speech as well. Traditionally, pronouns are divided into 'noun pronouns' and 'adjective pronouns'. In reality pronouns may also be used instead of numerals (twenty books — several books, many books) and adverbs (here, there, now, then). Using the prefix pro- in its meaning "instead of", we may, therefore, classify pronouns with regard to the parts of speech into pronouns, pro-adjectives, pro-numerals and pro-adverbs. [4.97]

Thus, pronouns are a collection of words correlated with different parts of speech, which accounts for their not being united by any morphological categories or syntactical functions. Sometimes a pronoun is correlated with one part of speech only. But very often this is not so. In a part of speech, as we know, variants of the same lexeme may belong to different subclasses. The peculiarity of pronouns is that variants of the same lexeme may be correlated with different parts of speech. This in the sentence Is this the bike? (Saroyan) is a pro-noun, while in the sentence He gave me this bike? It is a pro-adjective. Here in He lives here is a proadverb, but in from here to Moscow it is a pronoun. [4.98]

As pointed out by A. I. Smirnitsky, the boundaries of pronouns and those parts of speech with which they are correlated are rather fluid. The word this in this bike may be regarded both as an adjective pronoun and as a pronominal adjective, the word here — as a pronominal adverb and as an adverbial pronoun.

The relative references of the words today, yesterday, tomorrow are somewhat a kin to those of pronouns, yet they are not relative enough because the words denote definite units of time, days. Cf. now or then. [4.98]

It is no wonder, therefore, that there exist many words which are regarded as pronouns by some authors and as nouns or adjectives by others.

So the pronoun is the part of speech in which the definition of it as a separate part of speech has caused many difficulties. More than once in the history of linguistics the very existence of pronoun as a part of speech has been denied. However attempts of this kind have not proved successful and in present-day grammars, both English in Uzbek, the pronoun is recognized as a part of speech.

B.S.Khaimovich's points about pronouns is similar to Ilyish's opinions. It has been known that words fall into classes known as parts of speech in accordance with their lexico-grammatical meanings, morphological categories, typical stem-building elements, combinability and functions. B.S. Khaimovich gave a good definition to a pronoun: Pronouns are words serving to denote substances, qualities, quantities, circumstances, etc, not by naming or describing them, but by indicating them. The peculiarity of pronouns as a class of words is that they are not united by any of the above-mentioned features. True they have certain grammatical peculiarities, but what unites them is the way they denote reality. [3.45]

Another definition of or "pronoun" is given by R.Quirk and S.Greenbaum is also worth to say: "Pronoun constitute a heterogeneous class of items with numerous subclasses. Despite their variety, they are several features that pronouns (or major sub-classes of pronoun) have in common which distinguish them from nouns: they do not admit determiners; they often have in objective case; they often have person distinction; they often have overt gender contrast; singular and plural forms are often not morphologically related.[6] As to Uzbek linguist

G.M.Hoshimov, the pronoun is a primary part of speech denoting substances, qualities, circumstances, etc. not by naming or describing, but indicating them, pointing them. It has the grammatical meaning of “reference”, indication. [1.42]

In the Uzbek language, “olmosh” (Eng. pronoun) is a word of Arabic language origin “almash” that means ‘to replace’ in English. [6] Uzbek linguists such as N.Mahmudov and A. Nurmonov also tried to give their definitions of the pronoun as a part of speech: “the pronoun is a primary part of speech denoting substances, qualities, circumstances, etc. not by naming or describing, but indicating them, pointing them.”[5.38]

Pronouns are said to ‘deputize’ for other parts of speech: nouns (he, she, it, they); adjectives (his, her, its, their; this/these, that/those); numerals (many, much, few, several, some), and adverbs (here, there, thus). In conclusion, pronouns are a relatively small, class of words that function in the place of nouns or noun phrases, numerals, adjectives, adverbs and etc.

Bibliography

1. Hoshimov G. M. Lectures on The theory of English Grammar (Morphology) – Andijon, 2019.
2. Ilyish B.A. The structure of Modern English. – Leningrad: “Prosveshenie”, 1971.
3. Irisqulov A.T. Theoretical Grammar of English. - Tashkent: 2006.
4. Khaimovich H.T., Rogovskaya B.L. A course in English grammar. – Moskva: “Visshaya Shkola”, 1987.
5. Nurmonov A. Sh. Shahobiddinova. Iskandarova Sh. Nabiyeva D. O’zbek tilining nazariy grammatikasi. Morfologiya. -Toshkent: Yangi asr avlodi, 2001
6. Internet site: www.englishgrammar.com